ECONOMICS OF HUMAN RESOURCES: A BIBLIOGRAPHY

This bibliography includes selected books, pamphlets, government documents, professional journal articles, and other publications dealing with the subject of manpower and human resources. No attempt has been made to provide an exhaustive listing of all the major works in this field, in part because the scope of human resources is so broad -- reaching across traditional disciplinary lines, including not only economics but also education, psychology, sociology, and others -- and secondly because the primary function of the bibliography is merely to introduce undergraduate and graduate students to representative works in the emerging discipline of human resources. For those seeking a more comprehensive list of readings and references the indexes, abstracts, and journals identified at the end of the bibliograpny should prove useful.

The bibliography is divided into 9 categories, by subject matter:

I. General Works on Manpower and Human Resources
II. Concepts of Human Capital and Investment in Human Resources
III. Benefits and Costs of Education (Including Rates of Return and Relation between Schooling and Earnings)
IV. Human Resources as a Source of Economic Growth
V. The Stock of Education and Manpower Implications of School and College Programs
VI. Manpower Development and Training: Policies and Programs
VII. Health, Housing, Welfare Programs and Internal Migration as Investments in Human Resources
VIII. Role of Labor and Human Resources in Economic Thought
IX. Technological Change and Socio-Economic Implications
